And pales the best, the boldest daunts. The column halts: Close, and advance, Said Washington, Disarm at once That height! --no movement, no response; Wavered the Pennsylvania line; Great God, he said. my life is thine! Few heard him, but each eye was strained, When moving to the front, he reined His charger in, and, wheeling, right Before the battery held him checked; Like some grand statue in their sight He sat there silent, calm, erect. Confronting death: one momenta s hush, Then with a whirlwind s sudden rush, Before the battery once more Can shake the summit with its roar, Bight up the hill, upon the run, They charged, and captured every gun On Princeton s heights: the day was won. Suppose coincidence, or result; Give the old reason, Dnm vult; The fact is certain: the twin days Trenton and Princeton, in their blaze Of native valor, mark the turn In Freedom s fortunes; brighter bum Her struggling stars; though clouds still lower, No shrinking from the front of power! Doubt and suspense, but not despair: Lion and whelp their forest lair Disputed still, but this, grown bold, Feared not the giant, grim and old. Boys marched to battle, dotards planned High strategy, to save the land. Women changed hearts with men, and one Stood...
