Excerpt: . . . pleadings until in the nature of things it reaches a limit and meets with a demurrer or traverse. 62. REPLICATION. This is the third regular pleading in consecutive order, or the second regular pleading of plaintiff, and if he does not demur it is his only alternative if he answers at all. As traverse, confession and avoidance, and estoppel have already been discussed, nothing remains to be said except as to a new assignment and traverse de injuria, for in other respects the replication is similar to the pleas above mentioned. These are peculiar to the pleadings at this stage and are never found except in a replication, as a dilatory plea and general issue are never found except in the plea. If defendants plea missed the mark set him by plaintiff because of the indefiniteness of the declaration, and was addressed to facts...
