C., April 23-25, 1914, Upon the Invitation of the American Society on International Law at Its Eighth Annual Meeting The conference of teachers of international law was held at the City of Washington April 23-25, 1914, under the auspices of the American Society of International Law, in order to consider what measures, if any, could properly be taken to arouse a greater interest in international law where taught in American institutions of learning; to secure its introduction in American institutions of learning where it is not taught; to call attention to its importance to lawyers in the practice of their profession; and to suggest the advisability of a knowledge of its principles for admission to the bar; and to show, finally, the necessity of an understanding of the subject by the public at large, which in a democracy such as ours determines in the ultimate resort the foreign policy of the United States. It was felt that none were more competent than the teachers...
