Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from An Address: Anniversary Exercises of the Literary Society at Edgehill School, Princeton, N. J., March 27, 1854 When requested to participate in the interesting exercises of this occasion, I reluctantly accepted the part assigned me - that of making an address - mainly because I know that there is an extensive and savory bill of fare before you, and do not fancy being obliged to do the heavy work. But my reluctance has proved vain - and the next best thing I can do, is to promise beforehand that I will be short. I shall thus secure for my poor speech, at least the praise of brevity, which, for a modem speech, is very great praise. Thirty minutes then by Shrews-bury clock, and I will relieve your attention. Many things might we confer about on such an occasion. It furnishes a field of thought so wide, that for fear I should ramble too much, I will not only take a text but will try and stick to it. It is a good text, though taken from a heathen satirist, who cracked his whip at many bad things and some good ones, like most persons who make sarcasm their business.
