Excerpt: . . . prosperity of the Church of-England, and the interests of trueReligion, that there is still room for increased exertion. There are still some objects, which, either from the coastitution of oneof those Societies, -are necessarily and upon principle ex cluded, or from the variety of claims upon the benevolent attention of the other, have been hi- therto only partially accomplished. Among these, that of more widely circulating the Prayer-Book and Homilies of the Church of England has appeared peculiarly important We have here an unequivocal admission that the circulation of the Prayer-Book was hitherto only partially accomplished: and the constitution of the Bible Society is assigned as a reason for it. We cannot say, that the variety of claims on the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge has been another cause; for the distribution of the Prayer-Book is one of its chief objects. The partial accomplishment...
