A second experiment having been made, the novelty has passed away, and the response with which the call of the Committee met on both occasions, proved that the bold idea had only to be clothed in language, in order to call forth the sympathies of the brightest ornaments of humanity. But however august may be such an assembly, - however sublime the object at which it aims, - however benevolent its designs, - however judicious the plans devised, - however eloquent the addresses delivered, - however fervid the zeal enkindled, - and however deep the impressions produced, it is manifest that no lasting benefits would be secured without an accurate and a permanent record of its transactions. To secure such benefits to the cause of humanity, is the motive in committing to the press the following pages. While the sentiments therein contained demonstrate that the cupidity of the slave-owner, and the relentless cruelties of the slave-dealer remain unabated, they nevertheless prove that time, talents, energy, and property, consecrated to the rescue of the oppressed, have not been disregarded by Him who hath made of one blood all nations...
