Although a response rate in this range is not atypical of telephone surveys, nonresponse rates tend to run 18 Also, while higher for telephone interviewing than for personal visitation. overall response rates varied tremendously across states and urban areas, nonresponse to particular questions ranged as high as 26 percent. When combined, these factors sometimes reduce to below 50 percent the effective response rates for key questions ( for example, how many times has your child received a polio vaccine ), raising concerns about the accuracy of resulting estimates. Household Respondents Have The potential to use household surveys for the collection of childhood Difficulty Providing Accurate immunization data is limited by the accuracy with which household 19 Data respondents can supply information on childrens immunization status. CDC NIS Data available to before the initiation of the, including a report commissioned by the agency in 1975 to review the United States Immunization Survey, questioned the assumption that parents could 20 NIS accurately recall immunization history. Even as the was initiated in NCHS had a study in progress to assess the accuracy of responses to 1994, 21 the immunization supplement of the NHIS.
