Since trade has accounted for over half of GDP since 1990, it has been a major contributor to Ireland's expanding economy (OECD 2006). The following essay will hence identify and discuss the main features of Ireland's trade. Within the topic chapter 1 focuses on how Ireland has become one of the most open economies in OECD countries and thereby could attract multinational companies and Foreign direct Investment (FDI). Chapter 2 will outline the influence of trade on economic growth, employment, net output and labour productivity. Chapter 3 will give a brief overview of Ireland's current merchandise and service trade as well as FDI in- and outflows. Chapter 4...
